Employee Spotlight

Ron Wright

It was 1977. Gas was $.65 a gallon, the World Wide Web was still 14 years away and Ron Wright graduated from Washington High School in Washington, Illinois. He gave college a try but found it wasn't for him, so he started in the warehouse in distribution and worked his way up the ladder to a management position learning on the job. Ron got into the rep lighting business in 2000 as a direct Philips employee for Daybrite. Then in 2013 he came to Meglio and Associates and now handles outside sales in the Central Illinois territory.

That's a tough assignment in these days of Covid-19, but Ron is making the best of it, calling on and meeting with the few customers he is able to and keeping in touch via phone and email with those he can't. "It certainly is different, but we're making it work," he says.

When he's not selling Ron likes to stay active, spending time outdoors on his Harley, four-wheelers and hunting with his bird dogs. That's why his favorite time of year is Fall when temperatures are cool outside although he really enjoys all of the changing seasons. Action movies are his favorite particularly the classic westerns with John Wayne and Clint Eastwood. Ron likes to travel with family and figures he has literally been around the world four times.

What most people don't know about Ron is that he and his two brothers have played in a Country Southern Rock cover band for the past three years called the Whiskey River Band a.k.a. his nickname Rockin Ron for the band, which he says is known all over. He started playing the guitar 30 years ago and really enjoys performing albeit, the current circumstances have pretty much eliminated indoor gigs. He attributes his favorite quote to his bandmate brother, "You've got to be smart when you're being stupid."
